LET'S MAKE DINNER GREAT AGAIN

"All great change in America begins at the dinner table." This is what President Ronald Regan said in the Oval Office during his farewell address on January 11, 1989.

Growing up, I was very fortunate to have parents who encouraged the tradition of eating dinner around the kitchen table. Our family shared the nightly ritual of hearing my mom's voice announce, "Dinner's ready!" And we would stop whatever it was that we were doing and rush to the table, taking our places, eager to partake of the wonderful aroma that had been filling the house over the last hour or two.

It didn't matter how busy we had been during the day, or what events were scheduled, mealtime around the table was a welcomed requirement. The dinner table was our meeting place, where our hectic lives came together for a few moments between meetings, homework, and sports and it was one of the greatest habits I ever learned. Some nights our meal was simple. Some nights our meal was more extravagant. But what mattered the most, was that we were eating together.

Our mealtime didn't consist of silently eating with the television blaring in the background, nor did it consist of silently eating with the sound of our forks clattering and clinking against our plates. Our mealtime consisted of lively conversations that involved how we had spent our time that day at school, work, and play. Sometimes our conversations would involve the happenings of the world around us, our friends, our opinions, our ideas, or our problems. Our mealtime taught us about being together, appreciation, communication, and friendship within the family. These days we are closer than ever. Let's change America... at the dinner table!

Dear Concerned Subscriber,

Thank you for your letter regarding Chief Sauganash's Words of Wisdom earlier this week about the sun being the center of the galaxy. While Chief Sauganash is appreciative that you are carefully taking note of his words of wisdom, he is disheartened by your presumptuous insinuation that a "textbook on basic astronomy" could possibly contain more wisdom than his many moons of experience or, even more insulting, that a team of so-called scientists from NASA is a more reputable source of knowledge on the cosmos than the Chief himself. He certainly hopes that you do not carry that insinuation further to suggest that the earth is round, that his telepathic powers are mere guesswork, or any other such ridiculous myth that has been resoundingly debunked by highly respected members of The Coronacle editorial board. You should feel privileged to know, however, that he is willing to drop the whole matter if you, not he, rescind your letter and issue an apology of your own for your brazenly uncouth public questioning of Chief Sauganash's wisdom. The Chief is not usually so forgiving, so we recommend that you act immediately to accept this most gratuitous gesture of mercy before his wrath and that of the whole Council of Chiefs is stoked further.

EDWIN DECLARES CALEB McCCLURE ALGEBRAIC GENIUS

In an unprecedented virtual ceremony this morning attended by thousands of mathematicians around the globe, Edwin Carbajal declared Caleb McClure an Algebraic Genius for successfully solving yesterday's puzzle. It took several attempts and a short review session on order of operations, but McClure, who is now projected to go in the first round in the Mathlete draft this summer, squeezed by a Stanford-educated valedictorian, a University of Illinois-bound engineering student, and several people who claimed to have passed Edwin's Algebra class (including Edwin himself) to claim the coveted title. Edwin moved quickly to quash rumors that McClure would be replacing him as Algebra teacher at Northridge next year, stating that this puzzle was a one-off victory for McClure, and "the Algebra life is a marathon, not a sprint." However, a source close to McClure told us that he was already setting up a distance learning Algebra tutoring service to compete with Edwin's online lectures and that he would be calling for Edwin to publicly release his ACT math score. Shortly after the announcement, Texas Instruments reported that their new calculators, the TI-Caleb, are already on a 3-month back order.
