BIG LITTLE THINGS

By L. Madmartigan

One day, the Pontiac car division of General Motors received a complaint, saying, "My Pontiac car doesn't like vanilla ice-cream." General Motors, first ignored his complaint. So the owner of the car decided to write again clearly. He told them about how his family had ice-cream every day after dinner. Each day, they would decide on a different flavor, but after he bought a new Pontiac car, he was facing a strange problem. The car refused to start whenever he bought vanilla ice-cream. If it was any other flavor, there wasn't a problem. While most people would have called him crazy, General Motors decided to send an engineer to his house anyway.

To the engineer's surprise, the complaint turned out to be true. When the engineer got vanilla ice-cream, the car actually didn't start. He checked everything - the gas, the oil, the time it took to drive back and forth. Finally, the engineer realized, it took the man a lot longer to buy other flavors of ice-cream. But because vanilla was stored in a different case in the front of the store, he got back to the car faster. And this was just the clue he needed.

The answer was vapor lock! Because of the car stopping and starting constantly, fuel would turn to vapor and couldn't move through the system, causing the engine to die. Because vanilla ice-cream took little time to buy, the engine didn't have time to cool down. And thus the mystery was solved. General Motors redesigned the car all thanks to the strange complaint.

All big things start small. General Motors is a gigantic company with hundreds of people spending years designing each car. But one customer noticing a small detail led to the whole car getting redesigned. What about you? The big adventure of your life starts with the small struggles, with their victories and defeats, of every day. In what small struggle were you victorious today? In the ones that ended in failure, which one will be a victory tomorrow?

Putting With Music: Bogeying with Some Boogie

By Big Dog Kaiser

One common thing Sauganash Study Center has taught many people throughout the years is to utilize optimal work sessions. The idea revolves around the fact that when people are less distracted by their phone and by music while studying, they perform better academically. Recently, with e-learning on everyone's docket, people have more access to the internet and to possible distractions. Justin and Pat Healy always heavily enforce these guidelines, but I was wondering what happens when you infuse music into your sports.

I immediately formed a hypothesis that putting with music would definitely distract you from the game, and I formulated a way to test that. In the experiment, a golfer stands 7 feet away from a cup and putts the ball 10 times. Every time this action is completed the golfer is either listening to no music, country music, rap, jazz, rock, or classical music, in a given cycle. There were 5 cycles, meaning that there were 50 putts taken for every group of music. The cycles were similar to a snake draft, so that the improvement of the golfer is taken out of the statistics. My findings were that the two worst performers were jazz and no music, with each of them scoring 34/50. The third place spot was reserved for Rock and Roll, scoring a 36/50. There was a tie for second place, with both classical music and country music scoring 39/50, respectively. According to my study the best music to putt to is rap, which scored a 42/50. Disclaimer: this may not apply to your drive or your chip game. Music actually helps your putting. If you find yourself at a concert this summer and you need to sink a 7 foot putt, consider what genre of music you're listening to first.

TRIBAL WAR CHALLENGE 4

A number of you inquired about the score
Each chief has 2 points, no less, no more
Yesterday's challenge was literally a snore

At the time yesterday's issue went to print, both Chiefs Sauganash and Works-from-Home were engaged in a seemingly endless staring contest for Challenge 3. Many seasons of stargazing made each of them a formidable foe. As neither was willing to concede to the other after spending the night sleeping blinklessly with their eyes open, we declared it a draw to advance to today's challenge, sponsored by Domino's Pizza!

That pizza is God's gift to mankind is evident to all, but which pizza topping best shows forth the love of God?

Works-From-Home: Pepperoni. The way each slice turns into a little concave bowl, crispy at the edges, with a little pool of grease inside... surely this reflects God's ardent desire for all men to be happy.

Sauganash: Indeed, all must concede that God's greatness is made manifest in the wonders of pepperoni. But just as the love of God is the foundation of the universe and yet remains oft unacknowledged, the cheese invisibly supports the operation of all the other toppings. For what is a pizza without cheese? And what is the universe without the love of God?
