NATIONAL SUPERHERO DAY

By Fr Leo

Some people love superhero stories because they show the exact moment when a normal guy goes from being Just Like Us to being somehow better, faster, stronger. I'm inclined to disagree. I think superhero stories show us not how to become super but how to be heroes, choosing altruism over the pursuit of wealth and power.

Actually, the most important change is the interior one, and that's what makes them imitable. Of course they fix things around the world, but in every single superhero story the decisive action happens on the inside, and you can see how hard it is for them to overcome obstacles, many times unknown ones, for the sake of others.

Superheroes undergo three types of life-altering experiences that we can relate to.

The first is trauma, which lies at the heart of Batman's origin story, in which Bruce Wayne dedicates himself to fighting crime after seeing his parents murdered. The second life-altering force is destiny. Wayne at first is reluctant to accept his destiny, but eventually, he throws himself into his new job. Many of us identify with Wayne's challenge of assuming a great responsibility that compels him to grow up sooner than he wants to.

Lastly, there's sheer chance, which transformed a young Spiderman, who was using his power for selfish purposes until his beloved uncle was murdered by a street thug. Spiderman's heroism is an example of how random adverse events cause many of us to take stock of our lives and choose a different path.

I'd like to think that our doctors, nurses and first responders had a chance to serve others, they knew it would be traumatic but they embrace their destiny with a big smile. I hope this pandemic has reminded us that superheroes don't only exist in the Marvel universe!
